

Parasoleil

Parasoleil has developed a unique line of architectural panels to filter and sculpt light that are not only engineered to withstand the elements, but are profoundly artistic. It's something of a living architectural element that brings form to the ideals and impulses that shape experience.

They can be used to create special relationships and to offer nuance to structural detail or provide visual relief. The interplay between light and dark can create dramatic effect or add subtlety to any design and environment.

Laser-cut and hand-finished to order, each Parasoleil panel is the work of talented designers who draw their inspiration from nature, history, culture, and modern forms. Sizes, contours, and borders can be adapted to meet the project's needs.

Whether selecting from our standard collection or collaborating on a custom design, Parasoleil products enhance the functional aesthetics of any project.

Pattern Map

Pattern mapping establishes the baseline vernacular to discuss and compare patterns objectively in terms of how they will perform in a space. The map evaluates a pattern on four key elements:

- CRYSTALLINE
- ORGANIC
- MODULAR
- CONTINUOUS

An organic, continuous pattern is best for privacy or hiding something as it takes the brain longer to process these patterns than it does a pattern that is modular and crystalline, like a chain link fence that you can see right through. To learn more about pattern mapping and the best use for our different patterns, visit www.parasoleil.com/patterns

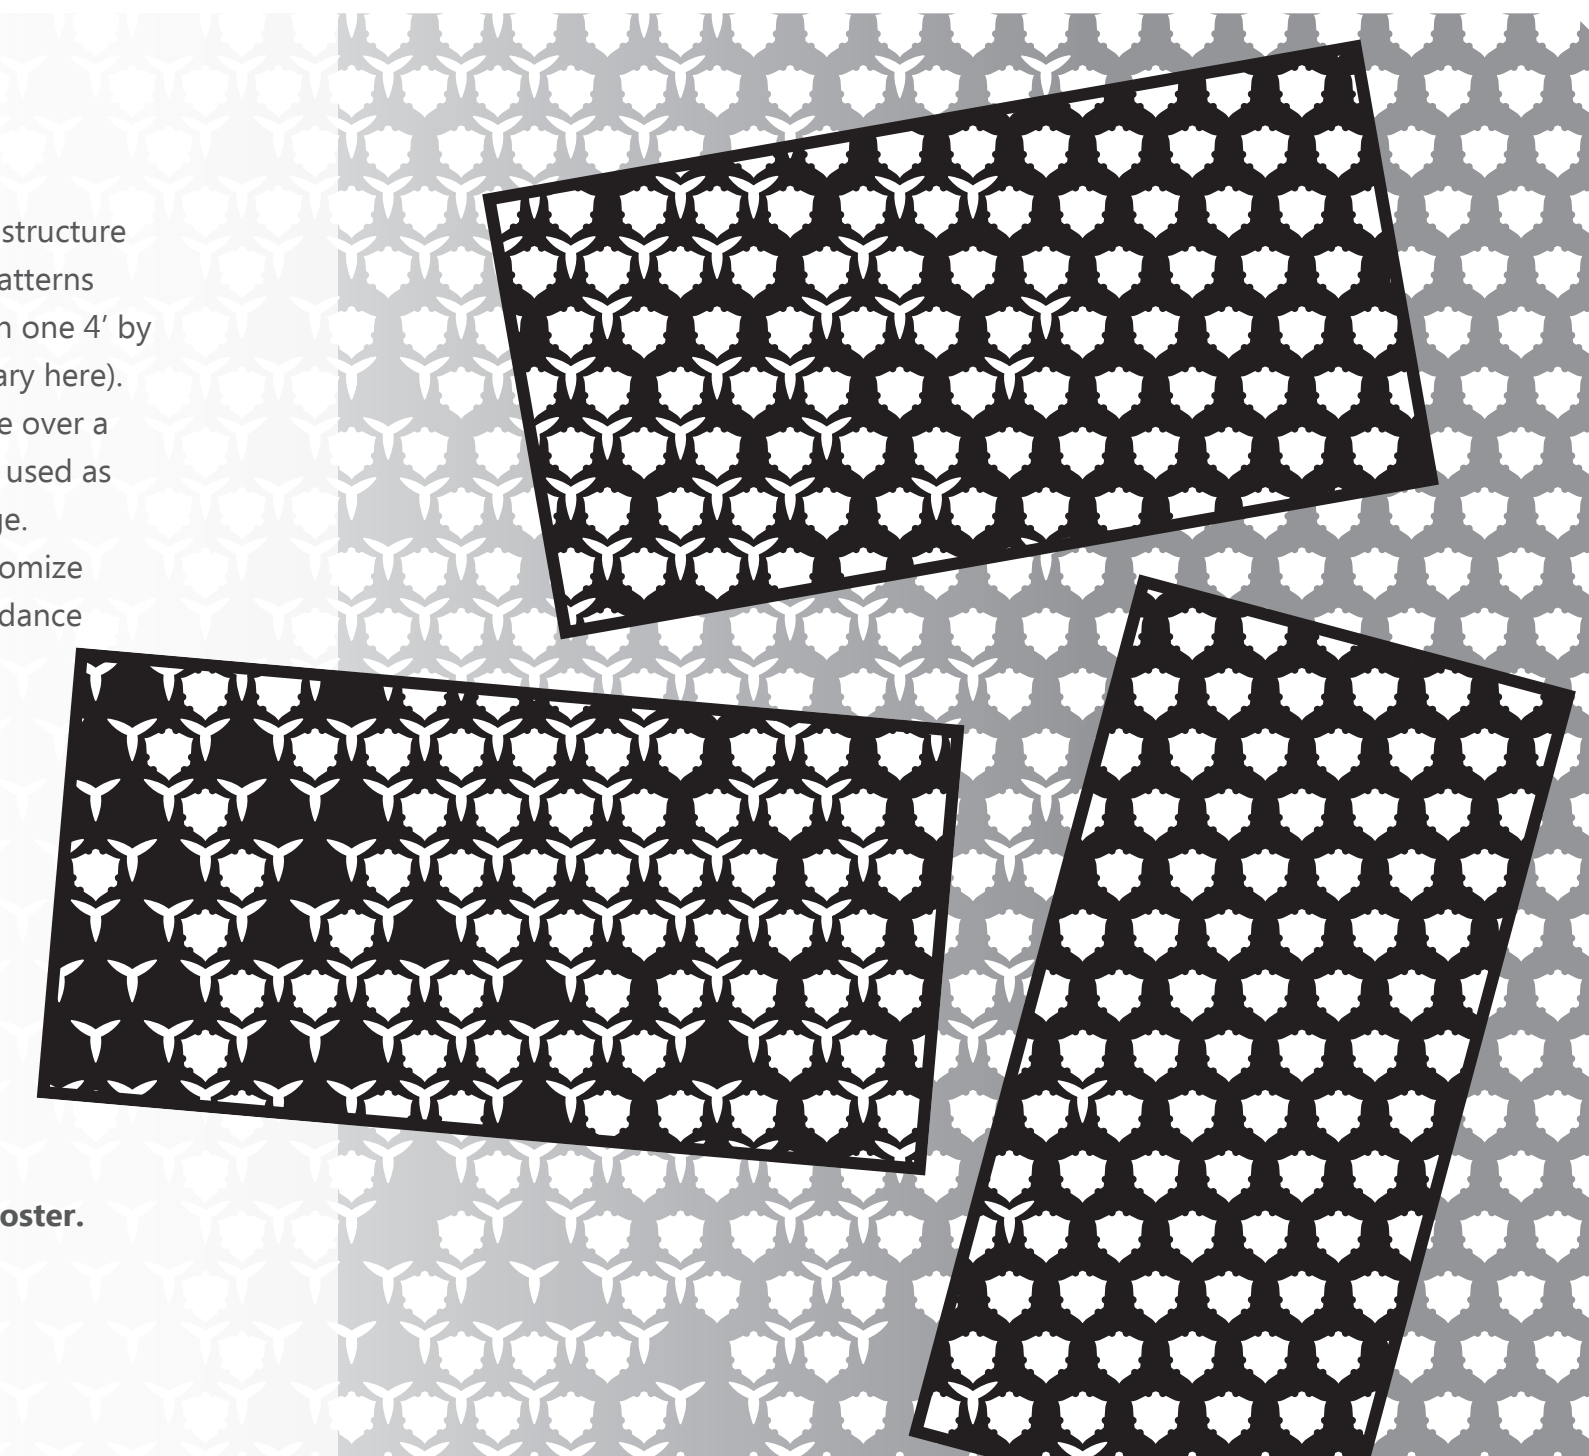

Progressive Pattern

Progressive patterns change visually in structure and/or openness. Strong progressive patterns change over a short distance, like within one 4' by 8' panel (as seen in the example of Apiary here). Symphonic progressive patterns change over a long distance, such as across 10 panels used as cladding on the side of a parking garage. These patterns allow our clients to customize their pattern easily and without the guidance of our team. To customize your progressive pattern or project, try our tool Project Creator at www.parasoleil.com/project-creator
